NOTES:

There are two types of articles in English: the definite article (the) and the indefinite article (a/an). They belong to a larger grammatical class called determiners.

I want to buy a shirt.

Can I have an egg for breakfast?

Please pass the salt.

As you can see, articles are used before nouns. An article points out which person or thing is being referred to. It also tells us whether that person or thing is being mentioned in a general or a specific sense.

ADJECTIVES

positive	comparative	superlative
happy	happier	happiest
easy	easier	easiest
heavy	heavier	heaviest

- When the adjective ends in a consonant with a short vowel sound before it, the last consonant doubles and -er and -est are added.

positive	comparative	superlative
hot	hotter	hottest
thin	thinner	thinnest
fat	fatter	fattest
sad	sadder	saddest

- Many two-syllable adjectives that do not end in y, and all adjectives with more than two syllables make the comparative and the superlative by adding more before the comparative and most before the superlative.

positive	comparative	superlative
proper	more proper	most proper beautiful	more beautiful	most beautiful interesting	more interesting	most interesting expensive	more expensive	most expensive

NOUNS

■ Abstract Nouns

An abstract noun is usually the name for a state of being, a concept, a quality or an action that has no physical existence. Things named by abstract nouns cannot be seen, touched, tasted or smelt.

In his youth, Sami played cricket for his college.
(a state of being)

Funny movies are popular because they have a lot of humour.
(a quality)

Mahatma Gandhi preached peace and non-violence.
(concepts)

Laughter is the best medicine. (action)

Many abstract nouns are formed from

1. adjectives

- youth from young
- strength from strong

2. verbs

- laughter from laugh
- freedom from free

3. common nouns

- friendship from friend
- patriotism from patriot

The names of subjects like art, music, maths, biology, etc. are also abstract nouns because they are also concepts.

Concrete Nouns

A noun referring to things that can be perceived or experienced through any of our five senses – which means that it can be seen, touched or felt, tasted, smelt or heard – is called a concrete noun.

Raman ate an apple.

The dog swam in the water.

Put some sugar in the tea.

In the sentences above, Raman, apple, dog, water, sugar and tea are all concrete nouns. Thus, concrete nouns can be common, proper or collective nouns.
